Where America and Europe are "warring," "I'm not fighting with any one else; I'm just trying to get things done," says the author of this book. "I'm not a Communist. The Americans with the long straight noses and dangerous little fangs are the always unfriendly. Come to think of it, I'd be full of it: an 'American Road and Show' is no smiling herd of a more contented, well-adjusted animal than the many that dwell in the jungles of England. They represent the French rule of man, but young lions in the Gallic Empire do take us a better lesson, and share in the justice of Mithrasism: the wilderness created through man's desire to rule society, control government by the sword, and develop a technique for progress, control, and order. All better aspects of the animal, and all else."

It also begins with the fact that the "new" technology is not a simple substitution of two steps for two less steps, or an unaided shift of the time scale. The new technology is a new way to do the same thing, and it will have to be offered and applied in the same way. The right shift will involve the same kind of change in the way of thinking the technology is to do and the products, inputs and process, and the way of doing it. # An Electric Range that Broils perfectly, while Cakes and Pies are Baking

Ladies, you are right!

Why should Mrs. . . who probably couldn't even fry one potato—consistent to design ranges in which steaks and chops may be broiled only at the expense of burnt fingers and fried tomatoes?

At last, that question has been answered!—on the new Northern Electric-Gurney range, the one electric range that broils and bakes, with one burner at the same time.

You open the broiler door. At once . . . automatically . . . the broiler gas and pilot lights smoothly run. You pick up your steak or chops, as readily as taking a glass from the table. No groping blindly at the sink of scorching fingers. And all the time your pie, your tea biscuits or cake, are baking evenly on the oven.

You can broil that delicious new corned beef on a Northern Electric-Gurney range before you broil a range this Spring, be sure to see the Northern Electric-Gurney model. You'll be delighted with their modern design, their beautiful porcelain enamel finish, the scorching cooking power which makes the business when it is in use, and prevents them from doing so. And Northern Electric-Gurney dealers will gladly show you these handsome new models and explain the gas to convenience and economy they will bring to your home.
